BY W. SEAMAN BEARE. They're passing away! Each moment doth bring
A whisper of death on its ne'er ceasing wing—
A whisper that bears to the hearts of love,
An echo of tri mph from regions above.
Forms that we cherish, how soon they depart!
E'en the bright smiles from a parent's fond heart
But lingers a moment, and then, like the spray,
The form and the smiles alike pass away.

They're passing away—yes, passing away!

Like shadows they vanish, scarce leaving a ray.

To illume the dark path, where trials and pain,
Seem ever to hover, but hover in vain.

All earth is a mourner! Each grave is a bier,
Where sorrow has planted its crest in a tear.

Come, list to the voice that steals through the clay:
It whispers—still whispers—"We're passing away."

They would be still whispers—"The spiles and the clab.

They're passing away! The smiles and the sigh Oft mingle together from hearts that are nigh, Where anguish and hope, with evergreens rare, Wreath chaplets that glisten with angelic care. ## "Uncle Tom" in Sutherlandshire. FROM LLOYD'S LONDON NEWSPAPER.

We give our best aid to the widest-circulation of the subjoined communication Northern Ensign to Mrs. Stowe. At Stalford-house, London, even as at Dunrobin castle, Sutherlandshire, Mrs. Stowe was an honored guest by ducal hosts, inasmuch as Mrs. Stowe had written in ink, compounded of tears and blood, the miseries of the negro. Well, in Sutherlandshire sheep are more valuable than human beings. What if Mrs. Stowe were to write an Uncle Sandy's Cabin, the scene Sutherlandshire, and some of the characters taken from the very highest of Scotch nobility?
